Zero Discrimination Day

International Zero Discrimination Day falls on 1st March every year to celebrate the advocacy and activism that brings the world closer to zero discrimination and the actions and laws that help to ensure that people can live with dignity. On Zero Discrimination Day this year, UNAIDS is highlighting the urgent need to take action against discriminatory laws. Ending discrimination and changing laws is the responsibility of us all. Everyone can play a part in ending discrimination and can try to make a difference, in ways both big and small. The Zero Discrimination Day 2019 campaign challenges people to act against laws that discriminate in their country.

"Human rights violations are happening all over the world because of discriminatory laws and practices," said Michel Sidibé, Executive Director of UNAIDS. "Laws must protect, not cause harm. All countries must carefully examine their laws and policies in order to ensure equality and protection for all people, without exception."

On Zero Discrimination Day, UNAIDS recalls the equal dignity and worth of every person, as enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and is calling for action to change discriminatory laws and practices, which are a significant barrier for access to health and other services.
